Diving Board Removal...

...is an option if people continue to use diving board when lifeguards are not present. Fairbrae's lifeguards have been trained to respond in case of a head/spinal injury (most common with diving boards) with backboard and specific head/chin splints using their hands and arms to reduce the risk of partial or complete paralysis for the victim. If an injury happens with no lifeguards present chances are considerably reduced for recovery. If the board continues to be used without lifeguards present I will take steps to remove the diving board, not one injury/life is worth it.
